The elements in your chart

Fire	Initiative · expression		2
Earth	Practicality · continuity		5
Air	Ideas · exchange		1
Water	Feeling · imagination		2

Equal counts of the ten planets, Sun through Pluto. 10 can be assigned to one element. These are placement counts, not personality percentages.

How to use your atlas

01 / Locate your placements in the planetary atlas.
02 / Read the interpretation alongside its calculation evidence.
03 / Try a reflection question; keep what fits your actual experience.
04 / Use aspects and dates as reference, not as a verdict.

The final pages explain the vocabulary, calculation settings and limits.

The planetary atlas

Signs and degrees are the calculation. Houses show where the chosen convention places them.

POINT	SIGN & DEGREE	PLACIDUS	WHOLE

Reading with confidence

A short reference to the words, settings and limits used throughout your atlas.

Sign

A 30-degree division of the tropical zodiac. In interpretation it describes a symbolic style.

House

An area of the chart assigned from time and place. A different house system can change the house number without changing a planet’s sign.

Aspect

An angular relationship between two chart points. We show the major aspects within explicitly defined limits.

Orb

The distance from an exact aspect angle. A tighter orb is a closer geometry, not evidence that a prediction is more certain.

Retrograde

Apparent backward motion in geocentric longitude. It is not a planet physically reversing its orbit.

Transit

A current or future planetary position compared with the natal chart. Dates describe the alignment, not a guaranteed event.

What the calculation can—and cannot—tell you

Swiss Ephemeris calculates astronomical positions. Astrological meanings are interpretive conventions and are not scientifically validated personality assessments or predictions.

Our published reference set checks 22 charts against Astro-Databank. Historical time-zone exceptions are documented; this does not establish accuracy for every possible birth input. Approximate times should be explored as a range.

Your data is sent to the calculation server; the PDF is assembled in your browser. The file and chart link include birth details. Share them only with people you choose.
